WHAT IS WIKIDATA?

Wikidata is a free, collaborative, multilingual, secondary database, collecting structured data to provide support for Wikipedia, Wikimedia Commons, the other wikis of the Wikimedia movement, and to anyone in the world.

Every wikipedia page has a wikidata item, but not every wikidata item has a wikipedia page

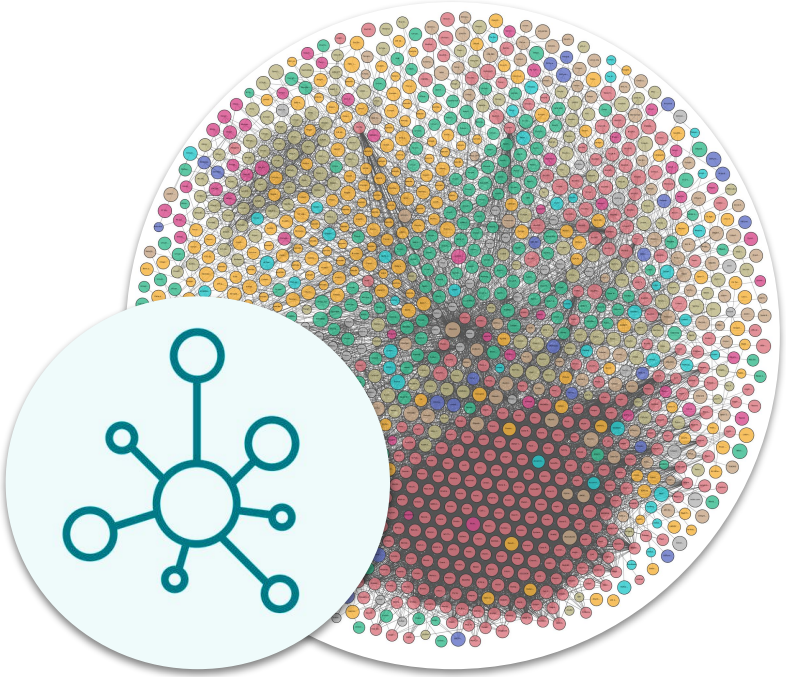

WIKIDATA + LINKED OPEN DATA

Tabular Data in (Siloed) Relational Databases

- Difficult for search engines to query
- Relationships are defined by primary / foreign keys
- Requires new columns and/or new match tables to add more attributes to a given record

Linked Open Data on the Web

- Accessible by anyone
- Relationships between data explicitly defined
- More flexible data structure allows you to make statements about one particular item at a time without changing the entire data structure

WIKIDATA ITEMS

- Used to represent all the things in human knowledge, including topics, concepts, and objects.
- For example, the "1988 Summer Olympics", "love", "Elvis Presley", and "gorilla" are all items in Wikidata.
- Wikidata items should be notable and *unique

WIKIDATA QUERY SERVICE

Info on this slide from Rob Hudson, archivist at Carnegie Hall

https://query.wikidata.org/

- Nice GIF from a dev on the Wikidata team - shows how easy it is to build queries
  (credit to Jonas Kress!)
- Help building queries! www.wikidata.org/wiki/Wikidata:SPARQL_query_service/queries/examples
- Nice blog with easy-to-follow instructions on querying
- Some fun queries - experiment by changing parameters:
  - Paintings depicting woodwind instruments
  - Paintings by Gustav Klimt
  - Paintings by Rembrandt in the Louvre or Rijksmuseum
